I think the result of this test is pretty accurate! Because of this, I've gotten in a habit in college of taking lots of notes. Writing things down is an incredibly effective way for me to organize the information in my head. The only thing that you, as an instructor, can do to help my learning style is to make everything incredibly organized. I really appreciate when classes are structured in tiers (kind of similar to navigating computer directories!) where there's a main idea, then several sub-ideas, then the minutiae. As long as information is organized and the emphasis of what's important is made clear, I'll be able to learn very effectively in this class.
